UK Envoy to Re-open Talks in Cyprus

LONDON (Reuters).—Mr. Julian Amery, the Colonial Under-Secretary, is to fly to Nicosia tomorrow for further negotiations with Cypriot leaders about the Mediterranean island colony's independence. It was announced here last night.

The British and Cypriot sides are still at odds over the size of the two military bases Britain will retain under her sovereignty. A slight increase in an independent Cyprus.

A Foreign Office statement said: "Mr. Julian Amery will be returning to Cyprus on Tuesday for further discussions with the Governor (Sir Hugh Foot) and Cypriot leaders."

Mr. Amery failed to break the deadlock on the size of the bases in negotiations he had in Nicosia earlier this month with Archbishop Makarios and Dr. Fazlul Karim, Greek Cypriot Vice-President of a Cypriot Republic.

Britain wants the total area of the two bases to be about 120 square miles. Archbishop Makarios originally offered 50 square miles.

During Mr. Amery's previous visit to Cyprus the Turkish-Cypriot leaders are reported to have put forward a counter-proposal under which Britain would have 50 square miles under her sovereignty and special facilities for the remaining 70 square miles.

Authoritative British sources, however, are adamant that Britain's original demand for 120 square miles has not changed.

Diplomatic sources here said that the British Government had been in touch with the Greek Cypriot Government before yesterday's announcement of Mr. Amery's second visit to Nicosia.

The original target date of independence for Cyprus was February 15, but this was postponed—the last time indefinitely—following the failure to reach agreement on the size of the bases.
